三、短文还原。

根据短文内容,从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。

1. People who know each other very well visit each other's houses without an invitation, but usually an invitation is needed. When people invite someone to their homes, they often say "Would you like to come for dinner on Saturday?" Answers are "Thanks. We'd love to. What time?" or "I'm sorry. We'd love to but we have tickets to the concert."

2.

Sometimes, the British may say “You must come over for a drink sometime.” or “Let’s go out for a meal one of these days.” 3. They sound like invitations. But they are not. Because they don’t mention(提及) a certain time or day. 4.

So next time you hear what sounds like an invitation, listen carefully. 5.

A. They just show that the person is trying to be friendly and the answers are “Yes, that would be nice.” or “OK. Yes, thanks.”

B. In Britain, people often invite friends to a meal, a party or just coffee.

C. These are usually just polite (礼貌的) ways of ending (结束) a talk.

D. Is it a real invitation or is the person just being friendly?

E. However, it is not polite to say “No, we wouldn't!”
